

Photo: Courtesy of Communications Nova Scotia

Chief Deborah Robinson of Wasoqopa'q and then-Chief Andrea Paul of Pictou Landing partake in the celebrations at the Grand Pré mawio'mi, 2017.

Elder Murdena Marshall from Eskasoni First Nation always felt a strong connection to her ancestors at the Debert archaeological sites.

Photo: Courtesy of Parks Canada, Fort Anne National Historic Site)

Molly Muise poses for a photograph at Annapolis Royal, Nova Scotia, in the mid-1800s.

Partridge Island is one of the most storied places in Mi'kma'kik.

Peter Wilmot (pictured here in 1930) was a saqmaw
at Pictou Landing.
He also founded
the community of Millbrook in 1886.

Photo: Courtesy of Kate Jadis

Jacoby Jadis-Battiste proudly wears his hair in a braid. There are many teachings about long hair and its care.

Photo: Courtesy of Sharon Farrell

Violet Isadore dances at the Annual Strawberry mawio'mi hosted by Annapolis Valley First Nation, 2023.

Trevor Gould from Paqtnkek Mi'kmaw
Nation snares salmon
on the Barneys River, 2021.

Photo: Courtesy of National Museum of the American Indian

Louise Mali A'n (Denny) Morris (pictured here in Eskasoni in 1930) is known for her fine splint shopping baskets.

Mi'kmaw guides,
taken in the 1890s,
Lake Joli, NS.
(back, left to right)
Louis Peters,
John Peters, John
McEwan, John Louis;
(front, left to right)
John Labrador,
Malti or Simeon
Pictou, Eli Pictou.

Photo: Courtesy of Nova Scotia Archives

Elder Douglas Knockwood visited the ancestral sites near Port Joli, NS, in 2017. While he grew up at Newville Lake, he lived in many places including not far from Port Joli for a short time. His memory was remarkable!

Photo: Courtesy of Nova Scotia Museum

At Kejimikujik National Park, we find petroglyphs that appear to represent Mi'kmaw life before and after contact with Europeans.

